

The figure scatterplot shows that users did plenty of work with source files at the starting weeks of the project. Users such as altvnv, Scott Alexander-Brown and matthew have made small contributions. In more recent weeks any developments had slowed and all the initial users in the beginning have stopped contributing to the project. Only a few users have done work recently. Though most of the work has been doing in the beginning weeks of the project with any other additions for the rest of the weeks. The git commands that were particularly useful are the git rebase which allows me to remove the github tokens from commits.

The project looks finished and all of the things needed have already been implemented.